Open to JCU students, staff, alumni and faculty

The Albert Walker Fuller Prize Committee invites students, alumni, faculty, and staff to apply for The Albert Walker Fuller Prize in Communication.

An award of €500 goes to the author of the best original published article that has appeared in a JCU publication, in the English language, for the first time during the twelve months preceding the nomination deadline. The article should evidence outstanding writing and rhetorical skills; an engagement with issues relevant to the university, its students, faculty, and staff; and an awareness of these issues' relevance to other communities and institutions in the world.
Opinion pieces are strongly encouraged.

Deadline is March 13th

So write now!!!

The Albert Walker Fuller Prize was named for the Publisher and Editor of The Enterprise, a newspaper that was published in Massachusetts and distributed throughout the Southeastern Massachusetts area. This newspaper was in the Fuller Family for three generations. Fuller's aim through his activities as an editorialist was to encourage people to talk about all aspects of an issue. The Albert Walker Fuller Prize in Communication aims at continuing this idea by awarding a prize to those editorial pieces that effectively do the same.
